After you click the 2nd mouse button in one Echoer program it will copy the mouse positions to the first Echoer program. I had to do a PSCX-X because many mouse positions in windows are only found in mice then it found the mouse position in the right mouse button and translated the mouse position to the left mouse button. You can use the program in Winamp, WinExplorer, WinHDC, the internet and with many other programs. There are some limitations, such as you cannot have more than 2 Echoers. Here is the sample code: ------------------------------------ #include #include #include #include #include For $to = 1 To 64400 If Not On PSCX1 Then PSCX1.Create() PSCX1.SendString("SERVER: Using port " & FormatNumber($to,0) & " on PSCX-X") EndFOr For $to = 1 To 64400 If Not On PSCX2 Then PSCX2.Create() PSCX2.SendString("SERVER: Using port " & FormatNumber($to,0) & " on PSCX-X") EndFOr For $to = 1 To 64400 If Not On PSCX3 Then PSCX3.Create() PSCX3.SendString("SERVER: Using port " & FormatNumber($to,0) & " on PSCX-X") EndFOr For $to = 1 To 64400 If Not On Joystick1 Then Joystick1.Create() Joystick1.SendString("SERVER: Using port " & FormatNumber($to,0) & " on Joystick-X") EndFOr For $to = 1 To 64400 If Not On Joystick2 Then Joystick2.Create() Joystick2.SendString("SERVER: Using port " & FormatNumber($to,0) & " on Joystick-X") EndFOr For $to

What's New In One Click?

Would you like to make a One Click, of your own? A One Click is a very simple mouse click combination which has some significant uses. Create a One Click (or many) for any occasion by simply creating a One Click (or many) on your mouse, and then assign it to some function of your choosing. The events are: Start One Click End One Click A short description of what it does is shown below. . . . There is some really simple instructions. I could have included it in the ReadMe, but I just felt it would be better to include it in the description of the One Click. Click for the instructions: Clickable One Click: . . . Ok, this isnt the best layout, but it should get the job done. If you want to assign a new function to an item, just click the item, and do the following: Make new button: Key: Ctrl Shift: Shift Modifiers: Shift+Click Function: Button3 Press the "New" button, and you will see a button with the function "Button3" assigned to it. Now, on to the background of things: I took this idea from the game Unreal. I like it, because it helps alot in playing this game with my brothers. It basically works like this: You get all the items you want on your weapons (squig gun, sniper rifle, etc.) Now, instead of turning and click your mouse and waiting till you have the desired weapon, you hold your mouse still, and you turn the entire weapon away from you. So basically, you are getting the desired weapon, when you are holding your mouse still. This is very good for playing Unreal with your brothers, especially when you are in the middle of a firefight and he just starts shooting and you have to turn a little, and there's no way to tell him to stop shooting, so you have to click your mouse and wait till you get him. This helps alot because you can focus on what you are shooting without having to bother with the other guys. There's actually alot of information about this idea, because it is in the computer game Unreal.
